RESEARCH IN PROGRESS

Northwestern University PI for Project READi – basic cognitive studies of response to literature among adolescents; development of high school curriculum intervention in response to literature; development of software tool to support discipline specific reading comprehension (SenseMaking in the Disciplines); development of assessments in response to literature; longitudinal study (with Dr. Margaret Beale Spencer of the University of Chicago) on relations between socio-emotional development and development of competence in reading comprehension in literature.

On-going analysis of 3 years of data collected from Cultural Modeling school wide intervention in an urban high school English department. Data includes video tapes of instruction (including 3 years of daily video taping of this researcher's classroom teaching in the project), student work, project developed assessments, talk aloud protocols of case study students, student and teacher interviews. One major goal of the analysis is to account for changes in students' participation in literary reasoning over time with the support of culturally responsive modeling of core concepts and strategies.
